Offering Peanuts to Birds

Peanuts are naturally high in fat. Fat provides abundant energy for all a bird-s daily activities—flying, preening, protecting the nest, nurturing hatchlings, singing, and more. High-fat foods like peanuts are especially critical during the winter or in spring and fall cold snaps. Birds require extra calories to maintain their body heat in the cold. Yet peanuts also provide fiber as well as calcium, potassium, and other nutrients as part of a bird-s well-rounded diet. These nuts do not spoil as quickly as other high-fat feeding options such as suet. Plus, they are relatively affordable for budget-conscious birders.
